Erin,

I remember the first moment I saw you. I remember your smile and the look in your eye when I first knew that I was in love with you, I remember the last moment that I saw you alive.

And now, I am alone, and have our memories to remember our love. And I will love you forever.

Thank you, Erin, for teaching me. You taught me about politics, music, art, poetry, etiquette, travel, and of course, wine.

Thank you for loving me and being my partner in this harsh world. Thank you for being family for me in a strange land. Thank you for your hugs and kisses when I needed them the most, and thank you for accepting my love and cherishing it.

I will be broken hearted for the rest of my life, my kitten, but the love that we shared makes it worth it all.

With all of my love and heart and soul,

David

Erin sat behind me in English class in the spring of 1995, my last semester at U of M-
-we connected almost immediately. We stayed in touch for some time after that and I always enjoyed our conversations, infrequent as they were. She was a bright and beautiful young woman and her death at such an early age will be mourned by those of us who remember her vitality and charm. My deepest sympathies to you, Kathryn.
